FOREWORD

Casting backwards that we may see tomorrow, calling on the tangible that we may solve the intangible, reading the immortal that we may understand the transitory, learning life that we may live it better.

DEDICATED

TO THE MEMORY OF

IRVING HEWITT ELIAS

1906 — 1929

MEMBER SENIOR CLASS

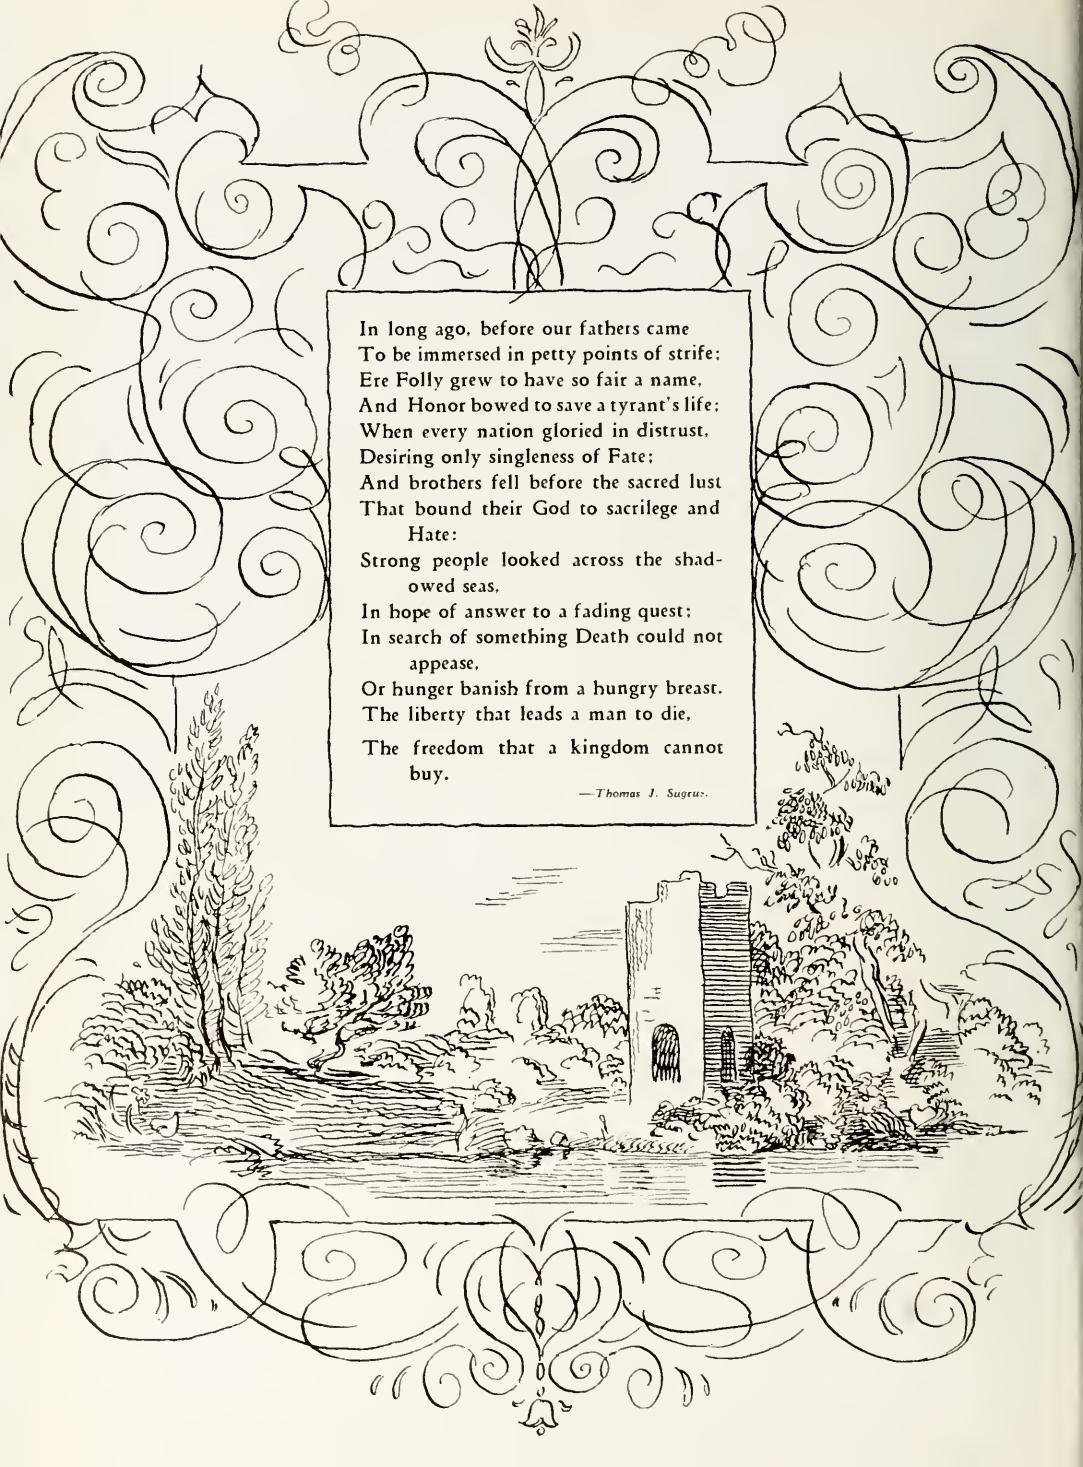

WILLIAM ALLEN PLUMMER

1907 — 1929

MEMBER SENIOR CLASS

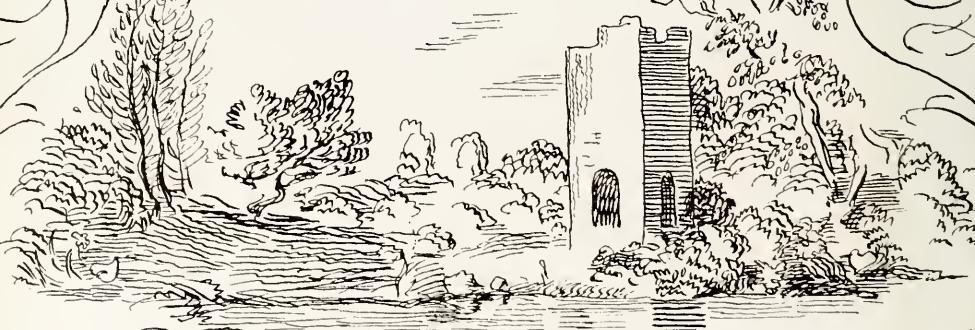

Who here lived and loved, struggled,
and achieved, desired and attained, manifesting a spirit that spoke of glory, an ability that promised greatness, a soul that captured heaven.

— 30 —

In long ago, before our fathers came
To be immersed in petty points of strife;
Ere Folly grew to have so fair a name,
And Honor bowed to save a tyrant's life;
When every nation gloried in distrust,
Desiring only singleness of Fate;
And brothers fell before the sacred lust
That bound their God to sacrilege and Hate:
Strong people looked across the shadowed seas,
In hope of answer to a fading quest;
In search of something Death could not appease,
Or hunger banish from a hungry breast.
The liberty that leads a man to die,
The freedom that a kingdom cannot buy.

Classes

They only knew a king had been unjust
A sacred right of choice had been denied;
The words "I will," had come to be
"I must."
Death or dishonor all they might decide.
They could not see beyond a quick tomorrow.
But yesterday was burned upon their soul;
And rather than endure it would they borrow
Upon the chance of some idyllic goal.
So to a far off God they made surrender.
Raising their prayers in tumult of desire;
Embarking with the courage that is splendor,
The glory that is Faith's eternal fire.
Young hearts have Hope that only Death will still;
Young hands have strength that only
Love may kill.

*A bit of the East and a bit of the West,
And a bit of the blue above;
And a bit of all right to make it tight
With a friendly fellow love.
A bit of the lost and a bit of the won
And a bit of the storm and strife;
A bit of the sun and a bit of the moon,
And a bit of the breath of life.
A bit of a laugh and a bit of a song,
And a bit of the rise and fall;
A bit of the tears and a bit of the fears,
And a bit of God over all.
A bit of the earth and a bit of the sky,
It's a bit I want to see;
For part of my soul is planted there,
At Washington and Lee.*

Life

*Half-hidden heartaches, tears that will not come;
One happy moment, balancing the sum;
One kiss remembered, that which was the best,
The years like hunters, taking all the rest.
One thrill, one golden deed, and one of brass;
One orchid flower, and all the rest is grass.
One glimpse of glory, blinding us to pain;
Then all recorded, either Loss or Gain.*

Fraternities

One curse has been removed, but now another
Raises its head to question their demesne;
Dark, shifting shadows, one behind the other,
Come silently and swiftly on the scene.
White nights of waiting follow dawns
of gladness,
Each day is painted with the fear of
Death;
The silence and the waiting grow to madness,
As every footfall draws a shortened
breath.
No beauty dwells within the forest empire,
No freedom stalks the never-silent shore,
No liberty, except the throbbing heart fire
That flickers not, nor sends a pall before.
The dead sleep peacefully beneath their
glory,
And History knows their souls have not been sorry.

Finale

*Love dies, hope dies, the things of beauty fade;
Alone the ageless soul, aloof and wise,
Leaves to the grave this fading, senseless jade,
Flitting to other lives, and other skies.*

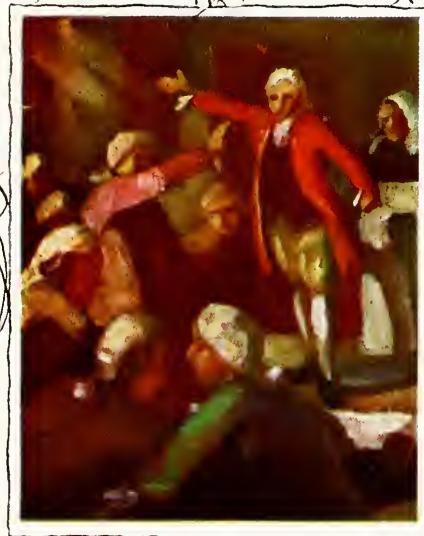

—T. J. S.

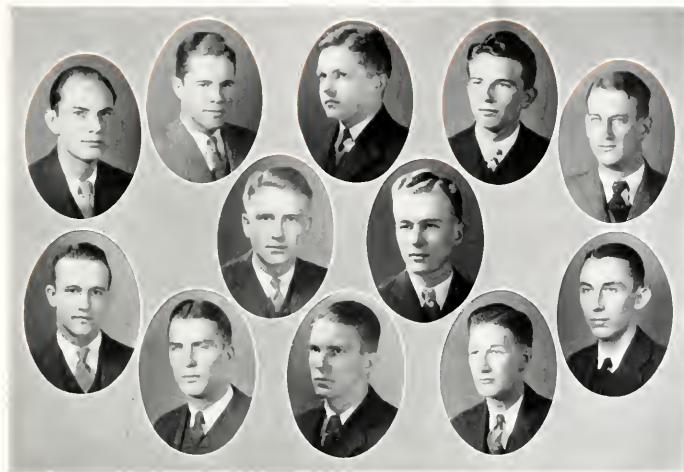

Organizations

Their God released, their bodies free of danger.
Their homes and hearts content at last
to rest;
The spectre comes again, no subtle
stranger,
No enemy, nor yet a welcome guest.
Designed upon the impudence of reason,
New patterned in the fashion of the age,
All things are either Loyalty or Treason,
And Freedom writes another bloody page.
Secure beneath the ashes of conception,
The fires of Liberty begin to stir;
Unheeding the man-made divine exception,
That tries to make a Deity of Sir:
Destroying all the Loyalists revere,
Consuming all the kindling wood of Fear.

—Thomas J. Sugue.

RESUME OF ACTIVITIES

Under the able direction of Professor Marvin G. Bauer, head of the Public Speaking Department and coach of the Washington and Lee teams, the season opened with a Northern trip, which included Princeton and American University. The members of the team making this trip were C. B. Fulton, S. R. Nichols and T. W. Davenport. The Washington and Lee team won from Princeton by a large vote in an audience decision. The American University debate was a non-decision debate on the subject of "Resolved, that higher education be given only to those with special ability."

An interesting debate on the educational question was held on the home campus with Ohio Wesleyan University, in which W. K. Jennings, S. R. Nichols, and T. W. Davenport participated.

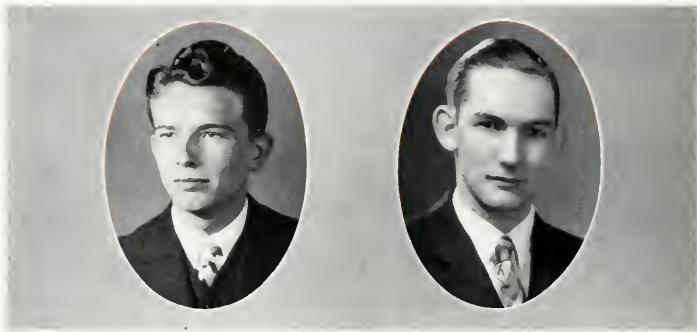

The Colorado College team came to the local campus to discuss the question, "Resolved, that the single standard is practical." R. G. McDougall, C. B. Fulton and S. R. Nichols supported the negative side of the question for Washington and Lee. The visitors won a judges' decision by a vote of two to one.

An extensive Southern trip was undertaken in the spring, which included Tennessee, Georgia and Florida. The two questions debated on this trip were: "Resolved, that the United States should have uniform divorce laws." Those making the trip were D. Sherby, W. K. Jennings and R. O. Morrow.

The season closed with an interesting and entertaining debate with the Harvard Chinese debating team on the question, "Resolved, that the Chinese philosophy of life is more conducive to human happiness than the American philosophy of life."

The Washington and Lee orators upheld their former records when W. W. Venable won the Virginia State Oratorical Contest for 1929, and J. R. Moore won second place in the state on the Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest on "The Constitution."

Young hearts are quickened to expectant
Death.
The flutter of a stifled fear is heard;
Old curses are renewed with softened
breath,
And Courage stalks in every whispered
word.
Half-hidden in the dusty path of years
The image of an ancient goal is seen,
The glories of an ideal, and the fears,
Impaled upon the things that might have been.
So gathering to bind themselves in one,
To crystallize a vision God foresaw.
To chronicle a drama just begun.
They write it into History and Law.
Strong fingers hold the pen that signs their will;
Strong hearts and hands its passages fulfill.

Beauty

The years are wasted that we spend in sleeping.
And wasted are the battles quickly won,
No smile is true that is not born of weeping.
No tie is tightened, if not first undone.
The years of hopeless hoping are the fleetest,
In memories of dreams that have come true;
The victories first lost are always sweetest,
The older fights are better than the new.
True-tempered in the heat of many summers,
Unbending in the winters of despair,
Long silent in the fate of patient mumpers,
The last reprise is well-deserved and fair.
There is no joyous tumult at the ending;
Too high the price, with payment ever pending.

Features

To Love and Hate are Man's inherent urges,
And quickly interchanging is his heart.
From smiling words to wrath emotion surges.
The closer drawn, the farther torn apart.
So in the history of men and nations,
The cup of brotherhood turns some times sour.
And all of young Democracy's creations
Are swallowed up in one unhappy hour.
There is no glass to tell the hour of turning.
From firm cohesion to a common cause;
We have no better way of ever learning
That Danger's death is Union's menopause.
Brother to brother cries in selfish fear;
Lover to lover turns a heedless ear.

Perhaps there is a reason in dissension;
Some Gods have petty ways of teaching
Man;
They seem to spurn the thought of intervention;
Letting their puppets struggle as they can.
Yet why must teaching go beyond the learning.
Reprisal fall upon a beaten foe;
Unbending wrath persist without returning.
Humility be heaped on bitter woe?
The fire is almost out, when from the embers,
A dying flame is nursed to sullen heat;
The pride of blood will not deny its members.
The hearts of gentlemen refuse defeat.
All has been lost, except what is the best:
The Victor bows before the lily crest.

VARSITY FOOTBALL RESUME, 1929

Under the tutelage of a new coach, and using an entirely new system of play, the Washington and Lee Generals enjoyed only a mediocre season from the standpoint of games won, but the spirit that the team showed, and the fight that the men displayed offset to some degree the matter of lost games.

The Generals started off the season with an overwhelming victory over Lynchburg College, running up a 64 to 6 score. The next Saturday the wearers of the Blue went down to Raleigh, and after trailing N. C. State for a half, came back strong in the third period, and rolled up 27 points to finally win, 27 to 6.

Journeying to Lexington, Ky., the following week, the Blue and White team ran into a pack of fighting Wildcats who defeated the Generals, 20 to 6. Captain Covington, of Kentucky, made several long runs and was instrumental in scoring the three Wildcat touchdowns. The Oberst cohorts scored their only touchdown by means of a long pass from Eberhardt to Williams.

M. N. THIBODEAN - HALFBACK

On Oct. 10, the Generals played their annual game with West Virginia in Charleston. The Mountaineers had a powerful team, but the Blue and White warriors fought them from start to finish, and although the final score was 36 to 6 in favor of the West Virginians, the game was a much harder fought one than the score indicated. The only General score was a short pass from Faulkner to Williams.

The Generals next battled the strong Tennessee team in Roanoke, and could not cope with the runs of McEver, Dodd, and Hackman, the Vols winning by a 39 to 0 score. The Blues were unable to stop the great attack of the Tennesseans, and although fighting desperately all the time, were never able to make much progress against their flashy opponents.

which finally ended, 36 to 6, in favor of the Gobblers. The opening attack of the Blackburg team seemed to bewilder the Generals, who, however, came back in the second period and displayed a superb brand of football to outscore their opponents in the matter of first downs. The Blue and White team was able to put across only one touchdown, it being the result of a long pass to Williams.

On Nov. 9, the Generals met the St. Johns team of Annapolis on Wilson Field, and succeeded in administering an 18 to 6 defeat to the Marylanders. The game was quite loosely played and from the spectators' viewpoint was somewhat unenjoyable. The affair was a passing contest for both teams.

Virginia came to Lexington Nov. 16, and the game of the year resulted in a 13 to 13 tie. "Tackling until their teeth chattered," the Fighting Generals surprised the Cavaliers and kept Washington and Lee from ranking last among the Big Four. The Blue and White warriors started a determined drive in the first quarter and succeeded in

Varsity Basketball Resume, 1930

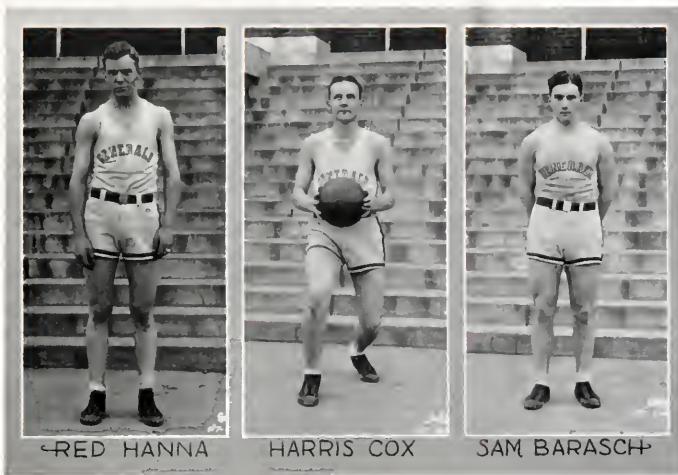

The Generals started the season with an experienced squad of men, and developed into one of the outstanding teams of the South, under the able tutelage of Coach Smith. With four letter men from last year's squad, and several newcomers from the freshman squad, a smooth working machine was developed which scored a total of 762 points in twenty games to 568 for their opponents. Of these twenty games played, sixteen were won and four lost, three to Southern conference foes and one to an outsider. Although the Generals will miss the services of Captain Wood next season, they should have another winning team.

St. Johns of Annapolis, was the first team played on the Generals' schedule and was overwhelmed by the score of 51 to 16. Williams, lanky center, led the attack for Washington and Lee with 15 points, closely followed by Cox, with 10 points. Richmond University brought a well-coached quint to Lexington and succeeded in holding the Generals to a 39 to 35 score in the second game of the season. Cox kept the home team in the running with 14 points to his credit while his teammate, Williams, followed with 11. Bridgewater College was no match for the record-making Generals and took the short end of a 62 to 30 score.

After three home games, the Generals journeyed into North Carolina for two games. North Carolina University was added to the list of defeated teams in a fast game at Chapel Hill, the score being 27 to 17. Durham was next invaded and here the Generals defeated Duke, one of the best teams in the conference, by the close score of 33 to 29. Returning home, the Generals met and defeated another North Carolina team, N. C. State, by the score of 39 to 28. The Lexington quint added another victory to their list a few days later when they defeated Virginia in a loosely played game by the score of 50 to 22.

The following week-end found the Blue and White team in Charleston, West Virginia, where they were to meet defeat for the first time. West Virginia presented a flashy attack, and the Generals took the small end of a 50 to 34 score. Williams continued his great work and amassed a total of 17 points. The Generals showed a reversal of form in their next game with Maryland at College Park and subdued the Old Liners by the score of 29 to 25. Williams again led his team in scoring, totaling 9 points.

The Generals returned to Lexington for a three-game series. North Carolina University met defeat at the hands of the Blue and White for the second time, the score being 39 to 34. This time Cox led his teammates in scoring with 13 points. William and Mary, who could not cope with the Washington and Lee five, was the next team to fall before the Blue and White by the score of 52 to 33. Cox again led the W. and L. scoring with 22 points. On Saturday night, the Generals whipped the Sewanee Tigers, after a hard fight, by the score of 35 to 30. Hanna came to the front in this contest to lead the scoring with 13 points. The Generals showed the strain of the last three games and just managed to eke out a 34 to 32 victory over Virginia in Charlottesville the following week. It was Williams' long shot in the closing minutes of play that gave the victory to the Blue and White. Upon returning home, the Generals showed their old-time form in trouncing Maryland by the score of 36 to 21. Cox was the high scorer, getting 15 points to his credit.

Blacksburg was the place of the Generals' next engagement and there they defeated V. P. I. with ease by the score of 35 to 20. Hanna again showed his ability to ring baskets by getting 13 points. On returning home, the Generals met a worthy foe in Duke and were defeated by the score of 29 to 26. It was the first conference loss for the Blue and White. Hanna continued his accurate shooting and succeeded in getting 9 points.

Kentucky was met on their home court in the next encounter and gave the Generals their second conference defeat by the score of 28 to 26. It was an extra-period game, and the Kentucky lads won as the result of McGinnis' long shot. Williams led the Blue and White attack with 8 points. The Generals, however, were not dismayed and returned to Lexington for their final game before going to Atlanta for the conference tournament. In this last game, V. P. I. was easily turned back by the large score of 53 to 32.

At the Southern Conference tournament, the Generals succeeded in trimming Mississippi University by the score of 33 to 29 in the first round in an extra-period game, only to lose out in the second round to Tennessee, in a hard fought game, by the score of 38 to 29.

RESUME, 1929

The Washington and Lee varsity baseball nine started the season with a team molded around Captain Gene White, Slaoker, and Lowden, monogram men of last year's team, and Radford, Atwood, and Rainer, of last year's reserves. Although having very little veteran material, Coach Smith produced a fairly well organized team, the members of the 1931 team filling in the gaps left by graduation. The team, however, never seemed to hit its stride and closed the season with an unimpressive record, having lost a large majority of the eighteen games played.

The Generals got off to a good start on their schedule by administering a 9 to 7 defeat to Lynchburg College. Atwood and Captain White scattered the ten safeties taken from their offerings over nine innings, while their mates were garnering two more tallies than the Hornet crew. This game was followed a few days later by a victory over the Catholic University of Washington. The Generals staged a three-run rally in the seventh inning and calted the game away by a 6 to 4 count. Princeton next invaded Lexington and succumbed before the masterful pitching of Radford, who toiled eight innings, and Atwood, who relieved Radford in the ninth inning with two on, and retired the side with strikes, giving the Blue and White a win over an aggregation which developed into one of the outstanding college nines of the East. Colgate was the next team on the schedule, but rain interfered with the game.

After a successful stand on the home diamond, the team journeyed into North Carolina only to be turned back three times by Tarheel teams. N. C. State was met first, and defeated the Generals with a football score of 21 to 14. The entire State team ran wild with the willow, while Slanker led the W. and L. attack with four hits in five trips to the plate. The next day the Generals invaded Durham and were whitewashed by the Duke Blue Devils. The wearers of the Blue and

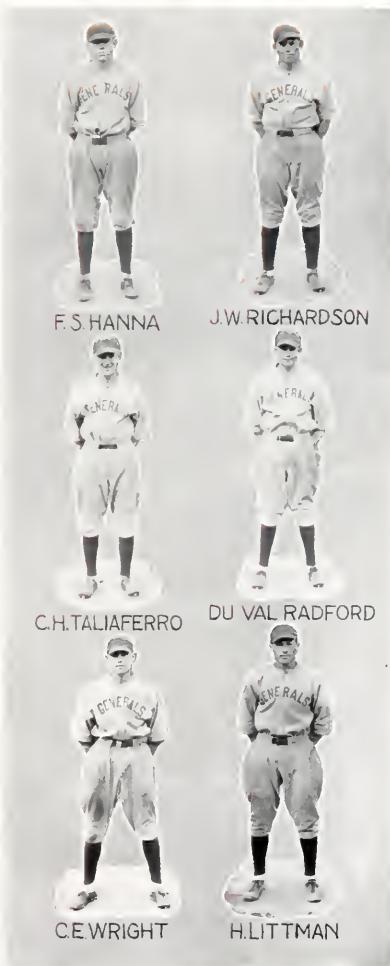

Varsity Baseball

White were able to garner only two hits off Jenkins, while the Durhamites collected eighteen hits and thirteen runs from the offerings of Radford. From Durham, the Generals went to Chapel Hill to take their third defeat at the hands of North Carolina University. The first Carolina man to face White crashed out a home run, but after that, White settled down, and the best that the Tarheels could do was to eke out a 7 to 5 victory.

Returning home, the Generals sent Delaware down to defeat, the score being 9 to 5. This victory was short-lived, for Virginia came to Lexington and administered a 6 to 5 defeat to the Generals. The game was a close battle and was not won until ten innings had been played. Davidson College followed in Virginia's footsteps and subdued the Generals by a 9 to 4 score.

The next game on the schedule was with North Carolina University, but rain prevented its being played. The Blue and White then were defeated by V. P. I. in Blacksburg by the score of 4 to 3 on their northern trip. Maryland was first encountered at College Park, the Old Liners winning by a 6 to 5 count in a fast game. The following day the Navy played host to the Generals and pounded Gene White's offerings hard to win by a 11 to 1 score.

On the return home, the Generals showed a reversal of form and defeated Guilford College, 5 to 3. N. C. State, after being rained out on the scheduled date of the game, returned the following Monday, and won a 9 to 3 decision after twelve innings of wrangling. The Generals went to pieces in the twelfth, and allowed six runs to cross the plate. The Old Liners from Maryland then came to Lexington to hand the Generals a 10 to 5 defeat. On May 10, behind fine fielding on behalf of their outfielders, V. P. I. scored their second victory of the season over the Blue and White nine. In the last game of the season, the Virginia Cavaliers bested Captain White and his mates by the score of 11 to 5.

Varsity Track Resume, 1929

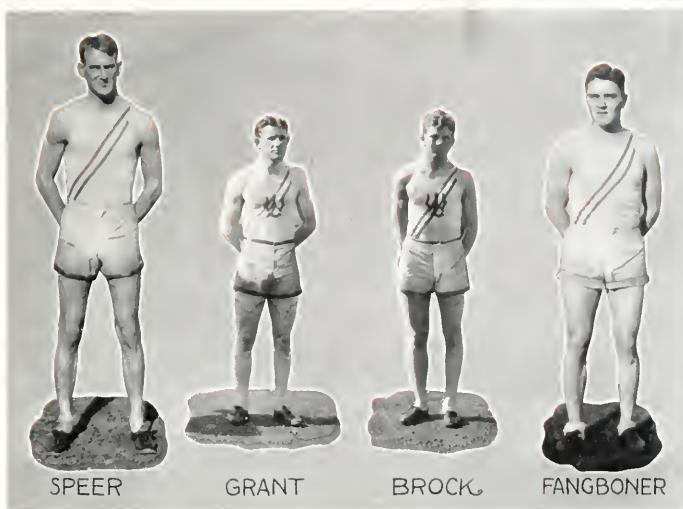

The varsity track team completed the most successful season it has had for several years. Results of the outdoor season show that the team won four of the five dual meets, placed second in the state meet, and fourth in the Southern Conference.

The Generals had their first dual meet of the season on April 1 when they took on the cinder men from Maryland. The meet was quite close, and it was not until the end of the javelin event that the wearers of the Blue and White were able to really forge ahead. At the end of the meet the score stood $68\frac{1}{2}$ to $57\frac{1}{2}$ in favor of the Generals. Captain Backus, Sandifer, Grant, and Williams proved to be the mainstays in the running events, accounting for over half of the team's points. Sandifer with fourteen points was high scorer.

On April 13, the General track men invaded North Carolina, a victory and a defeat marking their trip. After a $72\frac{1}{2}$ to $53\frac{1}{2}$ loss to North Carolina University on Saturday, the Blue and White rallied to give N. C. State its first defeat of the season on Monday by a $63\frac{1}{2}$ to $60\frac{1}{2}$ score. In both meets the Generals were blanked in the discus and shot put, garnering the majority of their points in the runs. The Generals took first in the century 220, 440, mile, low hurdles, and high hurdles in the meet with N. C. State. Sandifer was the mainstay of the Blue and White machine. At Chapel Hill he placed second in both dashes, the broad jump, and high jump. It was his first in the broad jump against State that won the meet for Washington and Lee. Ralph Grant continued his sensational sprinting, grabbing both dashes against State and Carolina.

Returning to their stronghold, the Generals turned in a win over the Richmond University team by a count of 90 to 36. Captain Backus and his men had things their own way, taking eleven firsts out of a possible fourteen. The feature of the afternoon proved to be the two-mile run when Mahler, W. and L., and Onesty, Richmond, entered the home stretch side by side, Onesty managing to win by a final plunge at the finish. Sandifer was again high point man, scoring fifteen points.

At the 1929 Penn Relay Carnival, a third, fifth, and sixth place was garnered by the Blue and White. The sprint medley took third honors in the race for the championship of America; Grant placed fifth in the century won by Simpson of Ohio State; and the mile relay placed sixth. Despite the fact that the sprint medley started from the third from the last lane, the quartet composed of Williams, Grant, Sandifer, and Backus finished in third place, preceded only by Chicago and New York universities.

Outscored in the field, the General tracksters dropped the state meet to the University of Virginia on May 4 at Charlottesville by a five-point margin. Virginia scored 50; W. and L., 45; V. M. I., 44; and V. P. I., 26. Grant and Backus shared honors, each winning two firsts. The mile relay, the final race of the day, was won by the Washington and Lee quartet composed of Sheppard, Simmons, Dickey, and Williams.

The Generals then closed their dual season with a 73 to 53 victory over Duke, taking every running event except two. Captain Backus broke the school record in the 880 for the fourth time during the season. The Blue and White took all three places in the 220, 440, and javelin, while the Blue Devils won the discus and shot put. Sandifer was high point scorer, with eleven points, closely followed by his teammates, Grant and Williams.

Washington and Lee, sending only five men to the Southern Conference meet was able to garner enough points to put them in fourth place. Backus and Williams won their respective events, the 880 and 440, while Grant and Sandifer placed in theirs. The mile relay team continued its successes by winning the Southern Conference Championship. This speedy quartet was composed of Captain Backus, Grant, Sheppard, and Williams.

Boxing Resume, 1930

Although winning only one meet of the six participated in, the Generals gave a good account of themselves in the other matches and showed that they will have to be reckoned with in the Conference race next year.

The season was opened against North Carolina, the Conference champions, who managed to administer a 5 to 2 defeat to Bus Malone's fighters. Florida was next met, and the Generals were barely nosed out, 4 to 3, after a spirited battle.

After a hard fight, the Generals were able to subdue V. P. I. by a 4 to 3 score to register in the win column. On the Northern trip, Washington and Lee met Catholic U., and Georgetown, losing close fights to each.

The match with Duke was one of the most colorful of the season, the Blue Devils finally winning through their superiority in the heavier weights. Sloshberg's fight in the 125-pound class was the bright spot in the meet.

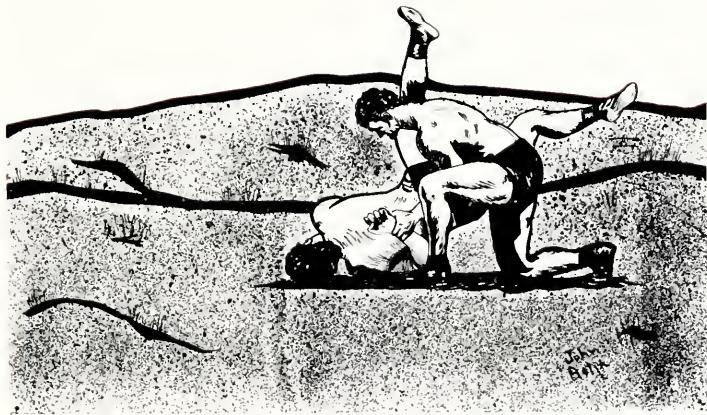

As a newcomer to Washington and Lee, Bus Malone did great work with the fighters and turned out a scrapping team. With the influx of new material next year, the team should present a well balanced outfit and be a threat in Conference circles.

Wrestling Resume, 1930

Washington and Lee had the most successful wrestling season that it has experienced in many years. The Generals won all their meets by overwhelming scores and showed they were to be reckoned with in the forthcoming Southern Conference Championship bouts.

The General grapplers opened the season on the home mat by swamping William and Mary with a 33 to 3 score. They next journeyed northward to West Point and after dropping the first two bouts, finally subdued the Army, 22 to 10.

Virginia was met in Charlottesville by the Blue and White and was defeated by the overwhelming score of 36 to 0. The Cavaliers were unable to do a thing with Coach Mathis' protégés.

The Generals held the last three meets on home ground and were able to turn back in succession N. C. State, V. P. I. and Duke by very large scores. The Duke meet was one of the hardest experienced by the team, but the Generals showed their superiority by a 22 to 6 win.

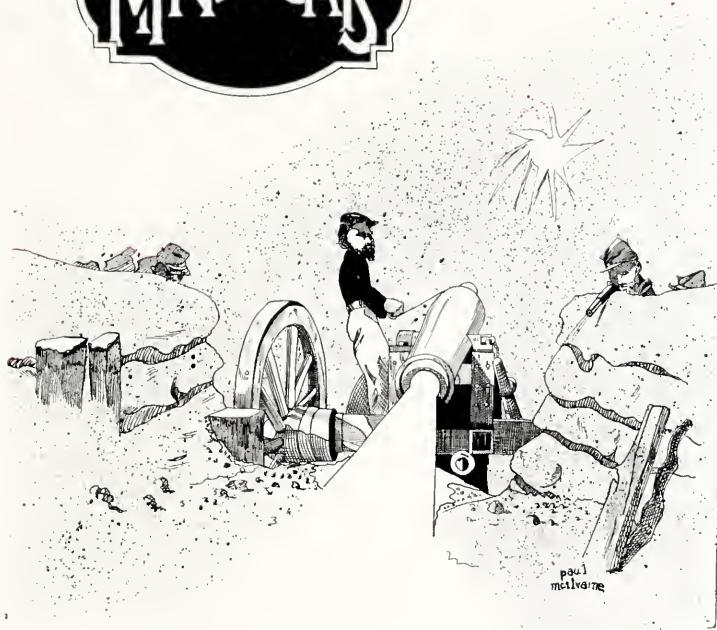

During the season W. H. Mathis gained the cup offered by Coach A. E. Mathis for the highest point score of the year by amassing a total of 26 points. He was undefeated throughout the whole season and stands a good chance to become Conference champion in his class. The team as a whole was one of the few undefeated ones in Conference competition and has a great chance to be Southern champion.

The Calyx

History

So in the end a better sun is dawning, Wisdom and Pain are mothered side by side;
Martyrs are dead and puppets cease their fawning.
Time is the price and Memory the guide.
Still in the hearts of men a battle rages.
Still in the souls of nations strife is bred:
Only the drama lives on different stages.
Mind is the playhouse. Folly apes the Dead.
Youth in its fire and fervor reads the story.
Seeing the glamour, blinded to the pain;
Counting upon the fortunes and the glory.
Reasoning not upon the cost of gain.
Life and its God go marching to the
morrow;
History stands and meditates in sorrow.

A HISTORY OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY

By GILMORE N. NUNN, '31

*"Upon the timbered ridge that lay
Across the billowy hills away,
There sprang a low academy
So rude that no enthusiast's dream
Could have foreshown the fame it rears
Beneath its centuries' weight of years."*

One of the world's greatest philosophers was to die! Had he ever held any malice towards the group of senators who had condemned him, those days had passed long since. Unto him death was inevitable.

The grey walls of an Athenian prison had held him captive for a period of months while the Greeks voyaged to and from Delos on a holy mission. As the prisoner passed day after day fearfully awaiting the return of the ship that was to bear him from the country that he loved so dearly, he began to face death more squarely.

Life held for him no appeals, for to live among men who had rendered him such indignities would be infinitely worse than death. Rather than spend his time blaspheming all humanity, he philosophized, and, as all doomed men who have passed the stage of anxiety and fear, he caught a keen insight into the soul of universal law.

This man was Socrates; the day and hour of his death was at hand. Crowded about him in his tiny cell were a few of his closest friends, who came to spend with their comrade one last hour. Though upon entering they were noticeably more nervous and afraid than was Socrates himself, he soon transplanted his noble spirit into their souls; for the remainder of the time the entire group sat in awed silence while this great man talked.

It is highly probable that within this single hour more human truths were expounded from a single man than ever before since in the records of history. Regardless of this fact a statement that deserves some attention here is that in which Socrates remarked that all opposites are generated out of opposites.

Out of torture, kindness is emulated; from the weaker comes the stronger; from the slower springs the swifter; and from the precedent of the cruel we judge the benevolent. Thus it was in the beginning; at the present we reap untold benefits from just such contrasts. So it will be in the future.

* * *

Never in the passage of time has the historic muse presented a sadder portraiture of violence, outrage, greed, and ignobility than that of the history of Scotland from the invasion of the Anglo-Saxons to the reign of Mary, Queen of Scots. It was a picture of undying war.

Yet out of just such a people, who filled the air with cries of battle on the open plain, then poured out their souls in prayer at home, sprung a race in which America of today has just cause to proudly call her own.

This Scotch-Irish influx first settled in Pennsylvania, then, on account of an evil foreboding concerning religion, politics, and representation, many of these families pushed on southward into the valley of Virginia.

Of course in this stream of emigration there came many Scotch, under Dunwiddie's patronage, and some English who desired fresher lands than those offered them along the seaboard. Still, the Scotch-Irish element predominated.

It was at this time (1743) that a family of Alexanders came to the valley, among them Robert Alexander, the founder of the first classical school west of the Blue Ridge, later to become Washington and Lee University.

He was a son of William Alexander, who migrated from Scotland to Ireland in the middle part of the seventeenth century. Robert, with his two brothers, came to America in 1736.

Though Robert Alexander was educated at Edinburgh, and obtained a thorough learning of Latin, Greek, and mathematics, he taught only the rudiments of the mother tongue, the reading of the Bible, and the Longer and Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Confession at his academy.

Thus it is to these hardy frontiersmen who plunged fearlessly into the dangers of an untitled new world that we owe the debt of gratitude. To those who challenged the fury of the Indian invader by building forts schools, and churches, by settling farms, do we owe our thanks for founding one of the oldest and traditional schools in America today.

The site of this schoolhouse, called Augusta Academy, was two miles southwest of Greenville in Augusta County, which at that time included Rockbridge County as well.

In 1753 the Rev. John Brown graduate of Princeton, was called to Providence and Timber Ridge churches, at which time he also succeeded Robert Alexander as headmaster of the school.

During his time the academy was successively moved several miles westward; first to a point near Old Providence, then to Mount Pleasant, near Fairfield, in the existing county of Rockbridge. This last move was shortly before the Revolution.

The Rev. Brown conducted the school until 1774, at which time he was assisted by William Graham, who two years later succeeded him and became principal. Under Graham's directorship, in 1776, Capt. Alexander Stuart and Mr. Samuel Houston, both of Timber Ridge, offered the academy a tract of eighty acres, "the neighbors offering to build a hewed log house, 28 feet by 21, one story and a half high, besides their subscriptions, and assuring of the probability that firewood and timber for building will be furnished gratis for at least twenty years."

The trustees accepted this offer, elected the Rev. Wm. Graham rector, and Mr. John Montgomery as his assistant, then moved Augusta Academy from Mt. Pleasant to Timber Ridge early in the spring of 1777. As a result of a meeting on the sixth day of May, 1776, "incited by the patriotic spirit of the day," the name of the school was changed to Liberty Hall.

* * *

*"The one

*Foremost and first of all to bear
The name that since has filled the air;
That stirs the world's heart to its core
As never name has done before—
The name of WASHINGTON!"*

Though the school was again removed in 1785 to a point near Lexington, where it was housed in a stone building and considerably enlarged (only to be destroyed by fire in the year 1863), the name remained the same until 1798. At this time George Washington, late President of the United States, bestowed upon the school one hundred shares of his stock in the James River Company.

It might be of interest to note that although the gift was made through the Virginia Legislature, which had originally presented Washington with the stock, "for a seminary in the upper part of the state," it was Washington who asked permission to dispose of this stock on the school of his own choice. This was in the year 1796.

In 1797 Liberty Hall was named by the President as the receiver of this donation, and though the trustees of the school received word of the decision in September, the late President of the United States didn't receive any message whatsoever from the school until the 14th of June, 1798. This eight months delay was due to a poor mail system at the time. The trustees had written the letter in the fall of the preceding year.

—*Marg. J. Preston: "Centennial Poem."

As a result of this donation the name of Liberty Hall was changed to Washington College, and the struggling, he-debted academy took on the aspects of a thriving, prosperous institution.

Back in 1782 the school received a charter of incorporation, and was thereafter under the legal control of the trustees appointed by that instrument. In 1796, upon word from Washington concerning his donation, the Virginia Legislature attempted to recharter and remodel the institution without paying the slightest attention to the rights vested in the trustees by the original incorporation. The principal enactments, as they understood them, were:

"In this college there shall be four schools, one of languages, one of mathematics, one of natural philosophy and astronomy, and one of logic, moral philosophy and belles lettres, in each of which schools there shall be a professor and as many tutors as shall from time to time be found necessary. One of the professors shall be appointed president, and the said president and professors shall be a body corporate by the name of the President and Professors of the College of Washington in Virginia."

Needless to say, the board of trustees immediately protested against such usurpation in violent terms, and ere many months had passed, won their point. The next Legislature promptly repealed the obnoxious act and changed the name of the institution to Washington Academy.

In 1796 Mr. Graham resigned his office, and for a period of two and a half years the school was committed to the direction of tutors. One of them, Conrad Speece by name, was characterized as being "uncoth in person, dress, and manners, unfashionable, but social in disposition, ready to entertain, full of droll humor, and very amusing." He was never seen without his quid of chewing tobacco, for the quiet and nonchalant manner in which he swallowed the liquid extract permitted him his practice even in the most elite of circles; it is said that he always slept with some of the weed tucked safely away in the side of his cheek!

Following the regime under the tutors, the Rev. George A. Baxter was appointed rector of Washington College, and remained so until 1829.

Though the school at this time witnessed its severest financial pinch, the beginning of the new century marked a new era in the history of Washington Academy. New instructors, new course of study, and new rules of order marked the most drastic changes.

At this time the town of Lexington, with its hundred families, petitioned and succeeded in drawing the academy from its position on the northern verge of Mulberry Hill to its present site. Aside from the fact that sentiment played a great part in making many wise men regard this change as injudicious, it was said that the town itself did not offer the right environment for college students.

A thirty-acre tract was purchased in 1803 from Andrew Alexander. It is one of the three low ridges on which the town of Lexington lies and commands an auspicious outlook. An excerpt from an old history claims, "If this scene were set down in the middle of Europe, the whole continent would flock to see it."

A plain two-story wooden house which had been the residence of the former proprietor was set aside for the home of the rector, and continued to be used as such for forty years.

Immediately a plan for a new building was drafted and adopted, and before the end of 1804 two academic buildings and a storage house were erected of brick. One stood on the ground which is now occupied by Newcomb Hall, and the other two where the low building at the eastern extreme of the university now stands. These two buildings, which were identical within and without, were named Graham Hall and Union Hall. They contained fifteen rooms and served as dormitories and class rooms for twenty years, at which time the center building was erected.

These buildings suffered premature decay because of narrow foundations of badly burned bricks. It might be added that when the condemnation of these buildings was made certain, their ultimate demolition was contracted by the assistance of students who attacked the tottering walls with old battering rams.

At this time the academy consisted of thirty acres of ground, its four new buildings, some thousands of dollars worth of books, various apparatus, and George Washington's donation of $20,000 in stock of the James River Company. This stock proved very valuable, with a yearly income of from $1,200 to $3,000. The Academy enjoyed comfortable circumstances for its first time.

On the death of George Washington an appropriate observance of the day was made by the delivery of a eulogium by the president. In commemoration of this day, similar assemblies have been continued ever since.

Due to the diversion of the James River dividends to the building of the great locks at Richmond, a law school which was proposed in 1804 was never realized. Until the buildings in 1804 were entirely completed, a majority of the students were grammar boys; soon after this, however, there was a gain both in number and age. During the last half of the decade, the average attendance at the academy was fifty. This included the grammar school, which was taught by the instructors of advanced courses.

At this time it was deemed safe for students from Massachusetts or Illinois to attend the school without the least danger of personal annoyance; heretofore strong cliques and social prejudices were frequent.

Upon application from the parents of prominent families youth in the grammar grades were permitted to attend the school. Such a school as existed in connection with the college in the earlier days was becoming a necessity.

But few degrees were conferred in this decade. In 1804 a John Hendren, of Lexington, received an A.B., and in 1806 this same degree was conferred on two other young men. In 1807 an honorary certificate in the scientific course was conferred. With the exception of one other similar degree, no more were recorded as being issued in this period.

After 1804 all students who did not live at home were required to stay in the academy buildings and take their meals at the steward's house.

Though the rooms were nothing elaborate, they were very comfortable, and no evidence of dissatisfaction among the students was recorded. The young men were allowed to lodge in any way most agreeable to themselves, and though this would seem to afford careless habits in respect to neatness, the worst thing noticed in this respect was the covering of walls by freehand charcoal drawings. One thing in which the students took a great deal of pride was the absolute equality which prevailed among all the young men.

At this time table board was priced at $30 for a session of five months; upon the building of the new steward's house, the price was raised to $38 per session. Later, in 1807, the price was raised to $40, and though some dissatisfaction prevailed among the students, they finally saw the necessity of such a "high price," and from then on cheerfully paid it.

As to laws which were in effect at this time, two forms of vice were especially forbidden--namely, card-playing and dancing. In answer to application of the students, the board passed the following resolution: "Be it resolved, that the students of Washington Academy observe as a holiday the twenty-second of February and the Fourth of July every year, and they shall not be subject to penalties for dancing on those days, provided their conduct in other respects shall be conformable to the laws of the academy."

The faculty were required to visit the rooms of the students after nine o'clock each night, at which time the students were supposed to be fast asleep.

In the grammar department boys under twelve years of age were punished by whipping or by "keeping in"; older boys were "reproved, rebuked, and exhorted with all force suffering and doctoring."

During the decade 1809 to 1819 the school witnessed the quietest period of its history. The James River stock more than supplied all needs, and even allowed for the appointment of a third professor. In 1807 the Cincinnati Society had voted to bestow an endowment upon the academy, but the reception of this fund into the college treasury was delayed for over forty years.

The institution, in fact, found itself with excess funds and invested them in the stock of the Virginia Bank and of the Farmers' Bank of Virginia. Regardless of the financial well-standing of the academy, the tuition was raised to $15 per session. To offset this, however, professors received an advance in salary twice during this period, and the treasurer, who received the large salary of $50, was made to settle his accounts twice a year.

There was great indecision at this time as to what to do concerning the fencing of the college grounds. It was decided to put the expense of this work on the college rather than the people who had property surrounding the grounds, and by 1820 the members of the neighboring farmyards had to mourn the loss of "College Hill" blue grass.

Along with these improvements the erection of a new center building was considered, and though it was not constructed at this time, the presidents' house was made more commodious by the addition of a wing and two rooms. Various other small improvements were consummated.

It might be noted that much consideration was given to the subject of discipline, and laws were made more strict. Formal reprimand by the rector was quite common, one expulsion resulting along with the suspension of seven students.

It was at this time, in 1817, that a great discussion arose over the establishment and location of the University of Virginia.

Along with several other petitions, the trustees of Washington College entered into the contest and would have won their point with the backing of $70,000 worth of Rockbridge subscriptions had it not been that "Mr. Jefferson had already started a college." Upon a final vote by the legislature to establish a university, Mr. Jefferson won his point, and the school was located at Charlottesville.

* * *

The average number of students that the academy had in this period was forty-five, including grammar boys, the extremes being twenty-seven and fifty-seven. The number of students enrolled in the regular college course was approximately thirty. Though they seemed to behave themselves better than those formerly enrolled, little is to be mentioned concerning their application of study.

The salaries at this time specified the payment of $550 from the permanent fund and $10 from each student to the president. The professors received $15 and $6.67 from the students.

In the first six years of this decade thirteen students received the Bachelor of Arts degree. No record is found of the conferring of degrees after 1815.

Fortunately the record concerning the founding of the Graham Society has been preserved. At a "convention" held in 1809 the society was born; later it was called the Graham Philanthropic Society.

Though no record can be found concerning the organization of the Washington Society, it might be supposed that it is somewhat younger than the Graham. In later years the name of the latter was changed to Graham-Lee Society, which organization still exists. The Washington Society is not on the campus at present.

It will be recalled by the reader that in a statement concerning the founding of the University of Virginia John Robinson was named as one of those who did a great deal in attempting to persuade the Legislature to make Washington Academy into the University. This is not the sole thing that John Robinson has done for the school.

In 1802, when Lexington was bidding for the removal of the academy from the outskirts of town, John Robinson subscribed a lot of ground, or if preferred, forty pounds in money and one hundred bushels of corn.

His next offer was the one heretofore referred to—that of 1817, in which he bequeathed his entire estate to the institution.

During this decade Robinson again subscribed a sum of money—in short, $2,000—in contemplation of new buildings for the school.

In 1819 Mr. Robinson was made a trustee of the college and, though he thought highly of the cause of education, the management of the institution's affairs did not suit him exactly and he attended but few meetings. This, however, had detracted none from the esteem and memory which all those who are connected with what is now Washington and Lee University hold for their friend and benefactor, John Robinson.

Mr. Robinson died in 1824 at the age of 73 years, and "was buried on the 27th of June with every mark of respect by the whole community and especially by the college authorities." The interment took place on the university ground, and though for many years the place was marked by only a small enclosure, minus a tombstone, the board of trustees took steps in 1852 to erect a monument in his memory.

In 1843 a gray limestone, fifteen feet in height and of one piece, was placed over the grave. This stone some few years later was thrown down somewhat mysteriously. The college took this to mean that the public was not satisfied with such an insufficient monument to the great man. Consequently, in 1850 new designs were obtained and considered. In 1855 the new monument of Italian marble was erected and dedicated. The total cost of the monument was $700.

The old buildings of the institution were beginning to decay; likewise they were considered very insufficient for the lodging and instruction of the number of students which attended the college at this time.

In 1821 the initial movement was made by the board for the erection of a new building, which still stands as the center of the existing group. The only available resources at sight were seventeen shares of bank stock, which were worth $1,275 at the time, and a subscription of $2,000, with a surplus of approximately $500 a year income.

Though some small changes in the plans were made before completion, the general scheme was adopted the following year.

In consideration of aid from the Cincinnati fund, which now seemed near at hand, and an increase of income from the James River stock, the trustees accepted a bid of Col. Jordan's in 1822. The sum required was $9,000, which was more than double the apparent resources the school had in sight.

The bricks for the college building were made on the ground; this accounts for the flattening of the surface and terracing of various portions of the landscape.

Now comes a most interesting notation in the history of the erection of Washington College.

With the laying of the corner stone in the spring of 1824 a remarkable ceremony, conceived by Mr. Robinson, was devised. He made an offering at this ceremony of a barrel containing forty gallons of fifteen-year-old fruit- and rye whiskey, said to be the best ever seen in Rockbridge County.

It might be stated here that in those times the private manufacture of whiskey or brandy was to no more discredit than the making of cider; intemperance, however, was looked down upon. To illustrate the point of this remark, it may be said that the Rev. James Morrison, who once sat on the trustee board of this institution, took charge of the church here only to find that seven of the eight elders were distillers.

Back to the corner stone ceremony, however. A notice was given that a public treat would be at hand on that day, and a large company from town and country assembled at the foundation of the new building.

The program was inaugurated by Mr. Robinson escorting two of the leading officials of the college to the barrel. In like manner followed a succession of dignitaries who honored the occasion. Though some courtesy marked this occasion, thirst soon broke through all restraint, and the multitude armed with "tin cups, pitchers, basins, buckets, and a variety of dippers, some of them more handy than nice, rushed for the barrel, and soon gave a glorious exhibition of what free whiskey can do for the noble creature made in the image of God."

In 1824 the building was completed. It was three stories in height and had the dimensions of 56 by 100 feet, fronted with several tall columns. The statue on top is more recent.

During this time the degree of A.B. was conferred on forty-two young men and the Master of Arts degree upon two men. The number of students in 1819-'20 and 1821 averaged forty-four; their ages ran between 16 and 21. Very few changes were made in the regulations concerning boarding of the students, salaries of the president, rooms, servants, etc.

Dr. Louis Marshall, a Virginian by birth, entered upon the duties as president of Washington College in November, 1836. Being a very learned man, having given a preparatory education to a large number of young men at a classical school on his fine Buckpond Farm, in Woodford County, Kentucky, he was received cordially by all the trustees in his new position.

On entering into this work Dr. Marshall proposed a new scheme of instruction and government. It was simply this: Every vestige of the curriculum arrangement was swept away, and each department was made into a separate school. This was clearing the deck for absolute freedom of study. Unless two or more young men voluntarily associated themselves for study and recitation, there were to be no classes in any subject; nor were they required to continue the arrangement of a day's study longer than was convenient and agreeable to themselves. Although certain attainments were to be required for the bachelor's degree, each student had the privilege of obtaining this goal by any route or at any rate of speed that he so chose. Each professor was to be entirely at the service of the students in his department at any time.

Though Dr. Marshall was considered a very eccentric man, irregular in temper, extreme in his likes and dislikes, strikingly unsystematic, arbitrary, and a despiser of contradiction, he was a great intellectual force, and a man of sterling virtue and indomitable spirit. His services at the college were greatly appreciated, and a new building to house the chemical and physical departments was erected at his suggestion in 1831.

Early in his reign—in 1829, to be exact—the grammar school, which had heretofore been a part of the college, was set off to itself and called the preparatory department. Nicholas Brown Seabrook was made its first principal and the new department was housed in the east building, the school being kept in the former assembly hall.

At this time the number of pupils did not exceed a dozen, but examinations for these boys were made long and tiresome. At the end of this year eleven boys were graduated, one distinguished, seven approved, and three disapproved.

Although Mr. Seabrook was not contented with his position, due to a failure on the part of the trustees to raise his guarantee of $450 per year income, he continued to teach for nearly four years. At the end of that time, he resigned his position.

George A. Baxter, D.D., and ex-president of the college, was made president of the board during the interim, and vacancies in the trustee board were filled at this time.

The only graduating class that the college had in this period was in 1830, the year of the regency, at which time the degree of bachelor of arts was conferred on eight students. No degree was issued after this until 1834.

In 1831 a new building was erected to accommodate the growth of the library, chemical, and philosophical departments, and to house a museum. The building was called the lyceum for a time; it stands southwest of the center building. The portico in front is of a later date.

In 1833 a change from two sessions, with vacations in the spring and fall to one annual session, with July and August for vacation, was made.

Though the consummation of the establishment of a medical school was never reached, much was done at this time by a Dr. John Cook Bennett to establish one here. At the same time a manual labor school was also proposed. These were only the crude beginnings of a new era in education; the idea of uniting mental, physical, and moral endeavor began to spread after this time.

Up until 1835 Professors Ruffner and Farnum constituted the entire faculty; at this time Mr. Henry Vethake formerly of New York University, was elected president and entered upon his duties here. Old histories state that "on this occasion he delivered a satisfactory inaugural address, which was printed."

President Vethake stayed here for only a short time, as the result of a personal attack which was made upon him by an unruly student who had been dismissed. The president was so highly insulted and mortified that he determined to seek another position even at his own cost.

Though the youth administered a beating to Dr. Farnum while he was attempting to aid the president, and later in the day attacked a third professor in front of McCrum's Drug Company, only to be outwitted by the professor's wooden cane, the remainder of the faculty disdained to resign.

Upon the resignation of President Vethake, the duties of the presidency, without the title of such, were placed on Professor Ruffner, he determined it should be the last time. Likewise did the trustees, for in October of the same year, he was unanimously honored with the appointment.

Due to the unsatisfaction of the preparatory department the younger boys were sent to a school in town until they had reached a point of sufficient maturity to take up college work.

In the session of 1835-'36 two wing buildings, which had been erected in 1834, were razed, and on their sites two low, one-story brick buildings were erected.

The salary of the president at this time was $1,000 and one-third of the fees; that of the professors, $800 and one-third of the fees. The tutor's salary was $600. An appropriation of $2,000 was made for books and apparatus.

It will be interesting to note that in the year 1837 the college uniforma fashion reached Lexington, and upon a petition from students the board passed the following ordinance: "Resolved, that each student who shall hereafter enter college shall provide himself with a coat made of deep blue cloth, the price of which shall not exceed $7 per yard, and that the coat be cut with a straight collar, to be fashioned before with hooks and eyes, and he trimmed with black braid and buttons, with a black silk star worked on each side of the collars and on each shirt, and that every student be required to wear his uniform in all cases out of college bounds."

On August 7, 1837, under the act of assembly converting the arsenal which was at Lexington into a military school, a board of visitors was appointed and ordered to meet in consideration of the matter. This will better be known as the founding of Virginia Military Institute.

The faculty dwelt together in a spirit of unity and peace. Thus did the students, with the exception of a few fights (generally for very small causes), and at rare intervals, rioting on the streets of Lexington. This was known as the "era of good feeling."

The hours kept at the college gave very little time for boisterous conduct. The cardinal hours for retiring were from nine to ten; for arising, at five in the morning. There was an intermission from twelve to two, then another working period from two to four winding up with an assemblage at the chapel. The games were marbles, catball, leap-frog, bandy, football, wrestling, jumping, etc.

On Saturdays, before noon, there were society meetings; Saturday afternoons were left to the discretion of the students. On Sunday morning, there was a short lecture by the president, then the student body and faculty adjourned to attend church in town. In the afternoon two Bible classes were held. The rest of the day was free, but at night there was a great "efflorescence of beaus and belles."

At this time the courses of study at the institution were substantially the same as those of Princeton and Eastern colleges. There were four different courses arranged: First, for the degree of bachelor of arts; second, for the study of those who were preparing for agriculture or a general business life; third, a military course; and fourth, a teachers' course.

On January 2, 1841, President Ruffner tendered his resignation at a meeting of the board. His two principal reasons for leaving were, first, that his nervous system was giving way under the strain to which it had been subjected for twenty-two years, and he did not feel like asking for a reduction in the amount of labor devolving upon him; secondly, he stated that his pecuniary interests dictated that he should leave.

At a later meeting of the board a resolution was addressed to Dr. Ruffner, stating that it was unanimously hoped that he would reconsider his resignation and continue if possible his connection with the college. Between this meeting and one appointed for April 15 the president was appealed to privately by leading members of the board. In April he agreed to remain at least one year longer.

Although Dr. Ruffner again took up his work in the autumn of 1841 with a heavy heart, the future brought much to encourage him. The institution advanced in all points, and the good will of the students, faculty, and the board was without exception.

At this time, over the protest of the faithful "watch-dog of the treasury," Captain Robert White, the board finally decided to appropriate money for three houses to cost approximately $3,500 each, and a fourth dwelling for the use of the president. These buildings were ready for occupancy in 1843.

President Ruffner, with the aid of the professors, voluntarily prepared a revised edition and regulations of the college. Within this revision a resolution restating the existing good will between Washington College and Virginia Military Institute was included. At this time the students of the two colleges had the privilege of attending classes in both institutions.

This step was taken as a result of some bitterness of feeling that prevailed among the friends of the two institutions. The college, which had been in a constant state of growth and prosperity for eight or nine years, was suffering somewhat of a relapse. This caused much delight to the friends of the institute.

Enmity even went to the extent that exponents of the two schools of the state took up the discussion in newspapers, with, perhaps, a greater number in favor of V. M. I. Much to the surprise of friends and foes, the college received in the fall of 1846 with an increase of over twenty students. The number now reached eighty-eight.

Though the salaries of the president and faculty had been increased a few years prior to this time, due to the expense in building and various improvements, all salaries were reduced to their original standing.

It might be added here that in the years 1847-'48 a complete dissolution between the college and the institute was decided upon. The only other notable things of these years were the debates in the Franklin Society on the division of the state of Virginia, and pamphlets and discussions on "the Skinner war."

The number of students during this period (1812-'48) was ninety-seven in 1842, seventy-seven in 1843, seventy-eight in 1844, sixty-one in 1845, sixty-four in 1846, eighty-eight in 1847, and seventy-four in 1848. Each year there was a graduating class, besides the conferring of honorary degrees. Thus, in the eight years the degree of bachelors of arts was obtained by seventy young men and the degree of master of arts by thirty-nine, besides one honorary degree. In this time LL.D. was conferred on but one, and D.D. on but two.

Due to the intensity of the Skinner fight Dr. Ruffner thought it advisable to resign. About the time of the final examinations in 1848 he quietly withdrew to Kanawha.

With grand humility he came,
And found his calm 'Mt. Vernon' here,
While the world's pacans crowned his name
With praise he did not turn to hear.
LEE!"*

This portion of the historical paper may be considered under the light of Gen. Robert E. Lee's directorship. Though some space is given to the period between 1848 and 1865, at which time the "Idol of the South" took full charge of the institution, the main body of the work concerns from that time on until the present day, 1930.

In 1848, following the resignation of President Henry Ruffner, George Junkin came to the head of affairs. In 1861, due to his uncompromising stand against secession in the South, he tendered his resignation to the board of trustees.

Little account is given of the period during the Civil War, for the doors of the college were closed. A majority of the students offered their services and enlisted in the Confederate army.

Though there were twelve men in the graduating class of 1861, a number of them had already "gone to the front." All of these graduates, however, were given their degrees, whether present at commencement or in the army.

The suspension of these activities, which included the pillaging of Lexington by the army of General Hunter, found the campus a commons, and the institution as a whole in a bad state of affairs. The buildings were in horrible need of repair, the treasury was absolutely bereft of funds, and, due to the late struggle, there were but few families from which to draw students. Even at the time when General Lee entered upon his duties here the resources were hardly enough to pay the salaries of four professors.

Money was raised, however, and when school finally did open again in 1865, the "five brick buildings in a row" were freshly painted and refinished.

At this time approximately one hundred students enrolled, and within the lapse of the year the student body increased to 320. There was no graduating class until 1866.

This is briefly a sketch of the few intervening years between 1848 and the reopening of the college after the Civil War. Due to the unavoidable manner in which records were kept from 1850 on, merely the high points of what is termed the "modern period" can be traced.

Regardless of the poor condition in which the institution found itself at the end of the war, an announcement was made that the board would meet on the fourth day of August, 1865. The faculty was present by invitation.

At this meeting quite a number of highly respectable gentlemen and scholars were nominated for president, and after many lengthy discussions, the board seemed ready to put the question to a vote.

In this last minute Col. Bolivar Christian arose and in a hesitating manner requested the privilege of the floor. He quoted a lady friend of his, who was a friend of Miss Mary Lee (the daughter of Gen. Robert E. Lee), as saying that while the Southern people had been willing and ready to do everything possible for the Lee family, the South itself had made no offers by which a respectable living might be earned.

*Margaret Preston: "Centennial Poem."

This statement caused a pause in the final voting for a new president. As a result of this, General Lee was nominated for the position. All other names were immediately withdrawn, the roll was checked, and this great man was unanimously elected.

A committee of five members, including the rector, was appointed to draw up a letter to General Lee, apprising him of his election and asking his acceptance. After this was done, it was suggested that the message be conveyed by a personal representative. No one was so well qualified as the rector.

At this time Judge Brockenbrough filled this position. He was a man of imposing stature, exceedingly well mannered, and a good talker. There was no doubt in the mind of anyone that he was the sole person fitted for this task.

Upon this nomination the judge arose, thanked each member for his kind word, then declined the offer, stating that he could not well make an appearance in General Lee's presence dressed as he was. The clothes that he wore at the time were his best; he had no money whatsoever with which to buy others.

At this a member of the board arose and offered to give Judge Brockenbrough a suit of rough broadcloth which one of his sons, who lived in the North, had sent him. Col. McLaughlin, another trustee, called to the attention of the members of the board a deal which had been made by a lady living in Lexington in which she had secured some money for a crop of tobacco. It was suggested that the college borrow some money from her.

This plan was accepted and carried out, consequently Judge Brockenbrough, thus outfitted and supplied, went on his mission, returning with the news that Lee would take the matter under consideration.

On the 24th of August the board received a letter of acceptance from General Lee. It read as follows:

"Pawtowhan County, Aug. 24, 1865.

"Gentlemen: I have delayed for some days replying to your letter of the 5th inst., informing me of my election by the board of trustees to the presidency of Washington College, from a desire to give the subject due consideration. Fully impressed with the responsibilities of the office, I have feared that I should be unable to discharge its duties to the satisfaction of the trustees or to the benefit of the country. The proper education of youth requires not only great ability, but I fear more strength than I now possess, for I do not feel able to undergo the labor of conducting classes in regular course of instruction. I could not, therefore, undertake more than the general administration and supervision of the institution. There is another subject which has caused me serious reflection, and is, I think, worthy of the consideration of the board. Being excluded from the terms of amnesty in the proclamation of the President of the United States, of the 29th of May last, and an object of censure to a portion of the country, I have thought it probable that my occupation of the position of president might, directly upon the college, a feeling of hostility; and I should, therefore, cause injury to an institution which it would be my highest desire to advance. I think it the duty of every citizen, in the present condition of the country, to do all in his power to aid in the restoration of peace and harmony and in no way to oppose the policy of the state or general government directed to that object. It is particularly incumbent on those charged with the instruction of the young to set them an example of submission to authority, and I could not consent to be the cause of admadversion upon the college. Should you, however, take a different view, and think that my services in the position tendered to me by the board will be advantageous to the college and country, I will yield to your judgment and accept it; otherwise, I must most respectfully decline the office. Begging you to express to the trustees of the college my heartfelt gratitude for the honor conferred upon me, and requesting you to accept my cordial thanks for the kind manner in which you have communicated their decision, I am, gentlemen, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

R. E. LEE."

Following this letter, money was borrowed and every possible effort made to put the college in perfect order. On September 18, 1865, "Traveler bore General Lee into Lexington."

General Lee's installation as president of Washington College was an affair lacking in pomp and ceremony. The simple exercises which accompanied this occasion were at the special request of General Lee.

Great plans had been made to have the installation take place in the college chapel; invitations were to be sent far and wide; a band was to be engaged to play enlivening airs; girls robed in white were to sing songs of welcome; it was to be a grand day. This was all done away with.

At nine a.m. on this memorable day General Robert E. Lee was inducted into a room filled with faculty, students, ministers of the town churches, a magistrate, and the county clerk. Upon his entrance the body rose, bowed; prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. White, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and Judge John H. Morgan, chairman of trustees, delivered a simple address. Following this a brief eulogy upon General Lee was delivered, then the president-to-be took the following oath:

"I do swear that I will to the best of my skill and judgment faithfully and truly discharge the duties required of me by an act entitled 'An Act for Incorporating the Rector and Trustees of Liberty Hall Academy,' without favor, affection, or partiality. So help me God."

General Lee was now president of Washington College. One of President Lee's most noteworthy attributes was the courtesy and tact with which he contact attached to the professorship at Lexington. His courtesy and gentle deference towards the faculty was largely responsible for this. However, on rare occasions, and when it became necessary, those in contact with him found that he was capable of asserting the full measure of his authority.

The faculty of Washington College, prior to General Lee's accession to the presidency, consisted of five members, the student body numbered less than one hundred. During his few years of directorship the number of professors was more than trebled, the student body was quadrupled, and the endowment raised materially. It has been said that "General Lee found the institution a college; he left it a university."

Lee's first home in Lexington was the old home of St. John's Jackson. He lived there for several years, until the present "president's house" was erected. Regardless of his home old or new, he continually kept it open to the students.

Three things on which Robert E. Lee has been termed a "justifiable crank" were religion, work, and moral straightforwardness. Through these three channels he expressed the importance of one great word: "Duty."

Of many of his papers concerning one of the three qualities listed above, one in particular is handed down to us today and may be found in the hands and on the desks of many of the present professors, giving and understanding this great man. He wrote: "My experience through life has convinced me that, while moderation and temperance in all things are commendable and beneficial, abstinence from spirituous liquor is the best safeguard of morals and health."

The new president had ever at heart the success and welfare of the students. On coming to the college he found that it had been required of students to occupy the dormitory. This privilege of the older students was granted the privilege of lodging in town. General Lee reversed this rule completely. All students were required to board and lodge in the families of the town; to lodge in the dormitory he deemed a privilege. The younger boys needed the influence of family life, he thought; the dormitories might be regarded as a place where the young might be open to temptation and license.

In 1850, due to ill health, the college authorities permitted General Lee to make an extended visit further South. On his return his health was so improved that he was able to preside at commencement.

During the session of 1870-71 his weakness returned to him, and on Wednesday, September 28, he became ill. On October 12, 1870, this great man, the "Idol of the South," died.

Very soon after Lee's death, and in memory of him, Washington College became the Washington and Lee University. In 1883 the Lee mausoleum was erected and Valentine's famous recumbent statue was unveiled.

General G. W. C. Lee was at the head of the institution until 1857, when he was succeeded by William L. Wilson, whose short incumbency was marked by the inauguration of the School of Applied Science. Shortly after his death, in 1905, the William L. Wilson School of Commerce was instituted. It was the first well organized and equipped school of its kind in the South. Dr. Wilson died in office, and for the remainder of the college year Harry St. George Tucker acted as president.

Following this, Mr. George H. Denny, George H. Denny was elected to the presidency. His administration, which closed in 1912, gave place to that of Henry Louis Smith, who held this position until Christmas of this past year.

In 1917 the schools of instruction were four—the Academic, those of the Commerce, Law and Equity, and Applied Science. The third one named grew out of the law school founded in Lexington in 1849 by Judge John W. Brockenbrough.

At this time there were thirty-six members of the faculty, all of whom were student instructors. The student body numbered 532, the material being drawn from thirty-two states of the union and six foreign countries.

Tuition and fees during this period other than those relating to laboratory work amounted to $105 a year, except in the law school.

It was at this time that Washington and Lee was made residuary legatee of the estate of Robert Parker Doremus, of New York.

Henry Louis Smith, due to growing age (though his efforts showed not the slightest signs of it), first tendered his resignation in the fiscal year 1928-'29. The trustees were unable, however, to find a man suitable for the position. Dr. Smith consented to stay until Christmas of the fiscal year 1929-'30.

In the early part of January, 1930, he permanently resigned and moved to his new home in North Carolina.

During the brief interlude of approximately two months the board elected Robert Henry Tucker, professor of Economics and Business Administration, to the position of acting president until a new one could be obtained.

On Friday, February 22, 1930, the announcement was made by Dr. Gales, at that time president of Wake Forest, had been elected president of Washington and Lee University. It is generally supposed that he will assume his new duties at the beginning of the next school year, September, 1930.

The institution in its present envelopment is comprised of approximately fifty buildings, including property owned on the campus, such as fraternity houses, etc. The art gallery, which was founded by the university in 1881 by Vincent L. Bradford, of Philadelphia, containing 65,000 volumes, was made possible through the generosity of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, and was completed in 1901. On the campus are buildings housing the administrative offices, accounting laboratory, biological laboratory, civil engineering laboratory, electrical engineering laboratory, chemical laboratory, geological laboratory, and physics laboratory.

The journalistic laboratory, which is considered one of the foremost in the country today, is housed under the roof of Washington College, one of the academic buildings, and an outgrowth of General Robert E. Lee's insurance of a journalism school in 1893. This is the first in the South.

Besides these buildings there are dormitories, administrative buildings, a dining hall, etc.

There are Schools of Commerce and Administration Applied Science, and Law. In the college Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees are offered. Besides the degrees in the Schools of Commerce and Administration and Law, a pre-medical course is obtainable.

The university has eleven administrative posts, nine administrative assistants, and forty-six members of the faculty. The student body numbers nine hundred, the material being drawn from thirty-eight states and four foreign countries.

The college year, which is divided into two terms, is covered by a tuition of $250, exclusive of laboratory and other fees. Room and board amounts to between $40 and $50 a month.

In closing, it might be mentioned that Washington and Lee University is neither a church nor a state institution; it is controlled by a self-perpetuating board. The Christian influence is predominant, and the Young Men's Christian Association, which was developed during the presidency of General Robert E. Lee, is highly active.

The honor system is one of the university's outstanding features. It has been in effect here many years, and is accepted by the students as a right of the university. This is strengthened by the social relation which exist between the faculty and student body. Is further promulgated by the efficient manner in which the Student Government operates on the campus. No student is subjected to vexatious restrictions or undemocratic relationship.

There is useless to say that the many hindrances to which the school was subjected for several decades after the Revolution are more "points of history."

The tiny school founded by Robert Alexander far back in the eighteenth century has slowly but surely developed into one of the nation's foremost and traditional institutions—the school that is today Washington and Lee University. * * *

AN EXPLANATION OF THE HISTORICAL THEME OF THE 1930 "CALYX."

In an attempt to recreate the atmosphere of the past and bring to our readers a vivid picture of Virginia's history, the 1930 "Calyx" has been planned with the idea of stimulating memory and retrospect. The decorations and general treatment are modelled on the style popular when the school was founded. The borders and pictures are copied, with slight alterations here and there, from books of the seventeenth and early eighteenth century. The cover design is based on a style widely used several centuries past. Slight imperfections have here and there been purposely left to further carry out the effect.

The Page with designs represent the great moments in Virginia's history and the sonnets provide the connecting links of the story. The staff of the 1930 "Calyx" expresses the hope that a pleasant review of the Old Dominion's glorious past, and a corresponding appreciation of its vicissitudes, struggle, will be affected in the minds of the readers who glance through this book.

What Business Shall I Enter?

This is the question that must soon be answered by many a young man leaving college to make his way in the world.

For him who is ambitious and willing to work, life insurance offers abundant opportunity and high reward. Unique in that it requires little, if any, capital, it is a business in which the effort contributed is the measure of progress, a business in which a man writes his own pay check.

The Calyx

The book is ended, and with it my labors. As the year draws to a close we look back upon it with memories only of that which was pleasant. The pain is forgotten, the worry and struggle hidden beneath the glory and happiness of something accomplished, and accomplished well. To my staff, and to the students of my Alma Mater, I extend thanks for assistance and support. I have tried to record the pageant of 1930, the drama of the school year. If within these pages you find something to bring a smile, something to provoke reminiscence, something to hallow memory, my work is more than rewarded. To the students of Washington and Lee I present the 1930 Calyx, with the hope that it will in some measure serve to represent the year now ending.

THOMAS J. SUGRUE
Editor-in-Chief.

The Calyx

In appreciation of the co-operation and aid extended to me in the construction and management of the 1930 Calyx, I wish to thank all those who so kindly and diligently gave their time and efforts to the success of this work. I wish to thank the staff which made my labors possible, the students who gave moral and financial support, the business men and business firms who showed their faith in our publication by advertising in it. I wish to thank each and all whose understanding and willingness to aid lightened the labors of myself and my staff. It has been a pleasure to serve in this capacity I only hope, as I close my books, and you close this one, that it has not been in vain.

RICHARD DOUGLAS HAMILTON
Business Manager.

Before

*Green fields before me, visions taking form;
Buds of ambition opened by the storm.
Where will I find myself at graduation,
Who will receive, and what—the last ovation?*

The Calyx

Afterward

*Old friends, old way,
Old wine and olden dreams;
My memory goes back to other days.*

Old Times—Old Times—

The chimes repeat, it seems;

I shan't forget, though we go different ways.

—T. J. S.
